MOCA adds two new directors

Two new directors, Brad Chan and Adam Liaw, have been added to the Board of the Museum of Chinese in Australia (MOCA). Both are well-known in the wider community and are a welcome addition to the MOCA Board which now has eight directors.

Brad Chan is the CEO of the Banna Property Group, a 3rd generation family business. His grandfather, the late Bernard Chan, had a long association assisting Sydney's Chinese community. Brad is the founder of Haymarket HQ, an innovation hub that helps startups grow into Asian markets and is the immediate past president of the Haymarket Chamber of Commerce.

Adam Liaw is known to many TV viewers as a MasterChef winner and to others as a food columnist. However, he is also a lawyer, television presenter, producer and writer. Formerly Head of Legal (Asia Pacific) for Disney Interactive based in Tokyo, Adam has extensive experience doing business in Asia.

MOCA Chairman, Dr John Yu, said "Broadening the base and reach of the Board will help MOCA raise the funds it needs to transform the former Haymarket Library building at 744 George Street to the Museum of Chinese in Australia."
